“ Who my ma was

I don't remember when I started calling her ma, she wasn't mom to me, she was my ma, but that's not the point. I don't know who she was before me but I can tell you who I see when I think of her. Ma is what I believe was a true angel. I know that sounds cliché', but what the hell, to me she was. She grew up poor from what I remember, so she learned the value of hard work. She was determined, focused and driven. This really shined from her when she was involved in church activities. She made sure to the best of her ability to be as much a Christ like person she could be. She had her faults and sins and that all that crap but who don't. She believed in forgiveness, even when I felt it wasn't deserved, or when I needed it.

She believed in justice and mercy and to take responsibility for your choices, good or bad, accept the consequences from it and learn from it. She believed in kindness and acceptance of everyone regardless of how they chose to live. She might not agree with it but she respected you enough as a person at least to not point fingers and condemn. That was for God to do and not her is what I was told, when I told her she's probably just wasting her time. I remember a few times she got her church on about something and got to going on, but after a few she'd just shrug her shoulders and say I guess I'll just have to pray for them. She didn't agree but she accepted it anyway and life went on. Did she really pray for them?, I think she did in a loving way like a mom would. Not some your gonna burn in hell crap cause your a sinner.

She believed in fairness and equality, she had a place in her heart for each person she met I believe. I remember how her eyes would look when she saw a person needing help, full of compassion and love and a desire to help you anyway she can. She would help you carry the load that might be crushing you or she might feed you. And you ate till you was full, but damn it was always so good! At the very least you was getting something to drink. Maybe left overs or a sandwich but she'd try her best to feed you something.

She was a social butterfly and was into the Sunday dinners that was at church. She took pride in what she made and made it with love in her heart. I saw her a few times be-boppin around and singing, smiling big. She was resilient , she got kicked down in life some many times and she always got back up and never gave up no matter what she had to go through to get to the other side. She was an encourager, she always had some way to urge you to keep going even when you thought you couldn't, or just cheer you on when you needed it. God knows I put my ma through a lot of shit in my life with her , some good , some bad, but she was always my ma and will always be my ma.
